The Coelbren / British Alphabet trail from "Discovery of the Ark of the Covenant" by Wilson and Blackett

This page is well hidden at the back of this large book (page 348) and I thought it worth sharing.

1 Julius Caesar described the ancient British Alphabet circa 55 BC.

2 Ammianus Marcellinus also described the British Alphabet and actually stated that the Greeks got their Alphabet from the British

3 An Alphabet is identically described, and matching British records, in the Nag Hamadi documents of the Gnostic church that were buried before AD 400 and discovered in 1945.

4 A large number of Khumric mediaeval poets mentioned and described the ancient British Alphabet starting with Daffydd ap Gwilym died AD 1367 and going onto around AD 1475.

5 Rhys Goch of Oswestry wrote a poem lampooning this Coelbren Alphabet in AD 1582

6 Therefore allegations that this ancient. British Alphabet is a fake that was forged around AD 1800 are ludicrous

7 The Ancient British Alphabet is also found inscribed on ancient stones in England, Wales, and Scotland, of around AD 200, AD 400-60 and as late as AD 1120.

8 Several writers noted the fact that the ancient British Alphabet is virtually identical with the Etruscan alphabet inscriptions found in Italy, and dating between 650 BC to around 50 BC.

The Trail of The British Alphabet

9 They also noted that the same ancient Alphabet is found on ancient inscriptions in the Aegean and Asia Minor (Turkey) dating back to the 600-700 BC period.

10 When Austin Layard excavated Nineveh in 1846 he found the royal archives of the Assyrian Emperors in over 25,000 baked clay tablets The same ancient British Alphabet appears on some of these ancient Assyrian archives and appears to date back to the period starting around c 740 BC.

11 This same Alphabet is therefore found all the way back along the ancient migration trails of the British people as described in the British Histories

12 The ciphers of the Alphabet were preserved by Llewellyn Sion of Glamorgan around AD 1540 - 1560. Therefore it is known which cipher means which modern letter of our present Alphabet.

13 The clear evidence is that if the same migrating people spoke the same Khumric language and used the same Alphabet then it should be possible to use the still extant Khumric "Welsh" language to read the inscriptions in Britain, in Etruna-Italy and in Rhaetia-Switzerland, in the Aegean and in Asia Minor- Turkey, in Assyria, and in Palestine.

14 This can be done and the British Ancient Histories are authentic and accurate
