Chapter 215

Battle of The Catalonian Fields

THE YEAR WAS 451 AD. A MILLION MEN FACED EACH OTHER. The opposing lines stretched into the distance as far as the eye could see, and on and on for miles and miles. Still there was not enough room for them all. In places, companies and regiments stood behind other companies and regiments, a hundred men deep, waiting for a place in the fighting line. In other places they waited five-hundred deep.

This was the heart of France - The Catalonian Fields. The destiny of Christendom lay in the balance. If the Hun invaders won, Europe was theirs - and the Huns always won.

Sitting on their horses beneath horse-tail banners, the Huns and their subject-allies the Ostrogoths, Gepidae, the recently allied Franks and Vandals, and many other Teutonic tribes, awaited orders from their unconquerable leader - Attila.

The Catalonian Fields

Catalonian Fields

Atilla, his Huns and allies were stopped by the allied Visigoth and Roman armies. A million men fought and perhaps half died on this one day. In places men fought on piles of bodies 30 feet high.

Opposite, beneath their eagles and behind locked shields, the Roman infantry awaited the commands of their leader, Aëtius. Today, when facing the Hunnic cavalry, they would have cavalry themselves, the absence of which had earlier severely curtailed their warfare against the illusive Hun. A treaty with their long -time enemies, the Visigoths, commanded by their bold leader Theodoric, brought these formidable warriors to the field and provided the Romans with a mobile guard for their vulnerable flanks. The long lines of these mounted Gothic north men waited, the pennants on their upraised long-lances fluttered in the breeze.

Both armies inched closer and closer together as newly- arriving units of the Hunnic army jostled and crowded for places in the front line - contingents that never seemed to stop arriving. Men were crowded shoulder to shoulder, front to back. The quick flashing manoeuvres of the Hunnic cavalry were unthinkable in this crush of humanity - there was no room for their famed lightning manoeuvres.

The Huns

The Huns themselves were described as having a yellowish skin, long arms, large chests, and narrow, slanting eyes. Many of their warriors had skulls deformed in childhood by a wooden board fastened tightly to their heads[1]. Other Huns were European types that could only be distinguished by their clothing and weapons. They were not European, however, their ancestry usually contained Hunnic ancestors.

Their arms consisted of bow, lance, lariat, sword and whip. There were three types of arrows - arrows for long, medium, and short ranges. The short-range arrows were the heavy armour piercing type. The traditional Hunnic tactic against an enemy was to shoot arrows at him until he fell into disarray, or was fretted into an ill-advised charge. Once his solid lines were broken, with small groups lured away from the protection of their fellows, the Huns quickly closed on them. Mounted foes were lassoed and pulled from their horses, or his horse was made to fall by locking his horse's legs together with a Hunnic whip. When the main body of an enemy was thoroughly demoralized and disorganized, the Huns charged with lance and sword to administer the coup-de-gras. The Hun style of combat appeared to be a wide open melee - but was in fact carefully thought-out and disciplined.

Hunnic chariots were like the chariots of other nations. They had vanquished their enemies on scores of battlefields. Javelin throwers, standing next to drivers, used the wild 30-mile-an-hour sling-shot chariot charge to heave javelins long distances into a massed enemy. The chariots then quickly circled back and repeated the performance. The enemy, without the advantage of the 30-mile-an-hour javelin boost, had to patiently endure the attack without being able to reply. At best, they could try to hit these rapidly moving armoured targets with bow and arrow - which was like trying to hit an American Indian on horseback.

Today, there were no traditional chariot manoeuvres. There was no room. The sky grew black with arrows loosed ten thousand at a time, one after another, for almost ten minutes, until each Hunnic archer had fired off his supply of 60 arrows. Then the chariots were ordered forward. Wheel to wheel, with no room for manoeuvre, they dashed straight at the Roman lines - closer and closer. Unable to manoeuvre left or right, they careened wildly until the horses impaled themselves on the spears the Romans had implanted in the ground in front of their lines as protection from such attacks. Following in the chariots' wake, the Hunnic cavalry thundered down on the Romans - thousands upon thousands of horses and men - to pile up on the wreckage of the chariots. Down went horses and men. Stumbling to their feet, the smaller Hunnic warriors, clad in leather armour, wielding spears and stone axes, now without their quick little horses to take them out of danger, or shields to protect them from sword cuts, climbed over piles of their own horses and dead to get at the Romans.

The Romans

The Roman soldiers were Roman in name only. They were Germans recruited into the Roman service and trained to fight as Roman infantry. Shoulder to shoulder - rectangular shields held at eye level - short swords darting out at the faces of the shield-less attackers, they fought in lines three deep. The front line fought only five minutes before being replaced by the second line, which was replaced five minutes later by the third line[2]. The Huns, unable to fight their traditional battle of manoeuvre, or being able to retreat because of the press of bodies, were forced to fight the Roman infantry in the type of battle the Roman legions were trained to fight best - in an infantry line that rotated ever-fresh fighters to the front. The individual Huns fought until exhaustion prevented them from raising their arms, and then they were cut down to be instantly replaced by another Hun, who suffered the same fate a few minutes later.

The Visigoths & Ostrogoths

Visigoths were faced by the Ostrogoths. The Visigoths were allied to the Romans - their enemy for the last 70 years. On the other side the Ostrogoths were allied to the Huns. The Goths, both Visigoth and Ostrogoth were East Germans - the same people as the West Germans who served in the Roman-Germanic army.

The newly-developed Visigothic cavalry was the ancestor of Western chivalry. Events had forced them to develop their own style of armour, armament, and tactics that became the standard of Western Chivalry. They were protected with steel helmet, leather Armour reinforced with steel plates, and shields. They were mounted and armed with long-handled throwing axes, long steel-bladed swords, and long lances. Physically larger than the Hun, they achieved their best results when they charged boot-to-boot en masse against an enemy which had gotten into a position where they could not quickly retreat. Such a charge created rubble and consternation in its wake. As quickly as they had charged, they turned and executed quick retreats to safety behind islands of their own heavily-armed infantry whose rear ranks doubled as archers

- archers who gave as good as they took. There, they were safe from entangling lariats and endless flights of armour-piercing Hunnic arrows. Their cousins in the service of the Huns, the Ostrogoths, were armed in Hunnic style - light leather armour and helmet, lance, curved sword, lariat, and whip.

The Battle

Neither army retreated. What followed was described by the Gothic historian Jodanes simply as "ruthless, manifold, immense, obstinate[3]. The opponents stood toe-to-toe all day long. There was no retreat. The piles of slain grew - five, ten, twenty deep in places. The armies struggled back and forth on hills of human bodies - at the bottom were the horses, chariots, and riders of the first attack. These had disappeared from sight - covered with the bodies of the slain.

When the sun set Attila had lost 300,000 men of the horde[4]. Other estimates of the number of dead start at 162,000. Attila had lost the first and only battle of his career. It was a decisive loss. The Goths lost their king, Theodoric, but the West hung on to the victory. The next day Attila took the remnant of his army across the Rhine to his base in Pannonia - but it wasn't over.

Attila's End

Attila's battle losses in France were heavy. Withdrawing across the Rhine River, he returned to his Pannonian home. In the spring of 452. he sallied forth to sack Italy. Famine and epidemic forced him to halt after plundering Po Valley cities. It was then he received Pope Leo I, who had been sent as an emissary of the Roman Emperor. Following his own maxim of never revealing secret negotiations with the enemy, Attila never revealed the agreement he reached with Leo I. However, he shortly returned across the Alps.

In 453, he took Ildico, the daughter of a Germanic chief whom he had executed for revolting against Hunnic rule, for a wife. Attila indulged himself in wives. He had 300.

The next morning he was found dead in a pool of blood. The story the Huns passed about was that he had burst a blood vessel. The rumour persisted that Ildico, to revenge her shame of being taken by a stranger, killed him[5].

To allow the world to believe that Attila had been killed by a woman was something that the Huns could not allow - which may account for the burst blood vessel story. History does not tell us what was the subsequent fate of Ildico. It does say that she may have accomplished what the combined armies of the West could not.

When word was received that Attila was dead, the coalition of Germanic tribes subject to the Huns revolted. After a succession of battles, they defeated the Huns in Pannonia at a major battle at the Nedao River in which 30,000 Huns were slain, including Attila's oldest son.

While the German tribes revolted against Hunnic over- lords, others took service in Roman armies. The Ostrogoths left and took service with the Eastern Roman Empire, thereby depriving the Huns of their long-term services and reducing them to just another despised warring tribe of outlaw strangers.

NEWS FROM EUROPE: "Dear Richard: "Repossessed homes in ENGLAND are now going to be used to house London's homeless foreigners. Since I was in SWEDEN last fall, 11 immigrants have been shot and killed on the streets of Stockholm. A railroad station where they gather was bombed. In GERMANY, Boris Becker picked up a black girl friend and was promptly booted off one tennis court. The Germans now openly speak of the 1 million Germans starved to death by the Americans after WWII was over. ENGLAND depends on its fishing fleet and has always kept its coastal waters to itself. The EC was asked to rule on a request by the Spanish fleet to use that area. The EC ruled that there is no such thing as English waters. The Spanish fishing fleet is the world's largest and has fished out the Mediterranean. English waters won't support two fishing fleets. SCOTLAND nearly kicked the traces, as you no doubt heard. A question of time. In Munich, GERMA-NY, 10,000 natives can find no place to live. The government has taken all available rental property for immigrants. Continuation of the Oktoberfest, held in Munich for the past 150 years, is in doubt. The 200-acre ground is occupied by hundreds of immigrants. In FRANCE, immigration and racial integration are becoming stubborn public issues. Media attacks don't work any more. An intelligence chap here reports that American prep school Jews send their sons to WISCONSIN camps to be trained in handling mortars, grenades and automatic weapons. What have you heard?" O. D. - Paris.

ED: Rabbi Meir Kahane in his book The Jewish Defence League, stated that there had been a training camp in New York. This is the first I've heard about camps in Wisconsin.

NAZI PARTY & LAND: "Dear Mr. Hoskins: I've noted from your writings that you have reservations about the Hitler party of Germany.
Why? I've read their platform and it beats both the American Democratic and Republican platforms. Germany was also first out of the 1930's depression. Their roads, ships, and planes were the best in the world."
O. K. - Arkansas.

ED: The party of Adolph Hitler criticized the Jewish banking monopoly but did little to break it up because it was defended by the world media and by Christian evangelicals who profited from being boosted by the media.

Neither did he address the LAND monopoly of the Catholic Church nor the land monopoly of the German Protestant nobility protected by the Lutheran Church. To this day this monopoly ties up giant tracts of German land promised by God to his people. THAT is the key question
- and we are talking about most of the land area of Germany. The question of who will own the land has caused Europe almost 1,000 years of wars and millions of dead. The strife won't go away until it is resolved. How can the land be divided as ordered by God if it is tied up in monopolies organizations who give lip service but refuse to obey the Word which is God. Religious politicians continue to stir the pot hoping to get Church land back[6].

It wasn't an accident that Protestant East Germany was given over to the tender mercies of the Soviet Slavs after WWII - a la "St. Bartholomew's Day" and Catholic W. Germany wasn't. It wasn't an accident that the communists confiscated the protestant estates that they had earlier taken from the Catholic Church, who had first taken them from the people. It isn't an accident that the present Catholic Pope is a Polish Slav able to make deals with Polish Catholic politicians. It isn't an accident that there is a truce of long standing between the Catholic Church and communism.

Today, the German Protestant princes fight to retrieve land their ancestors confiscated from the Roman Catholic Church during the Reformation. The Catholic Church got this land from the people in exchange for praying land owners out of "purgatory". The new Polish state confiscated the German Protestant land and holds it in escrow for concessions from the Catholic Church. The Catholic Church has made some sort of deal with them to get partial or entire possession of the land they consider theirs.

When the smoke clears, the only ones who will be shafted once again will be the people - regardless of religion - whose land it is. The Shepherd says the monopoly of these religious and political leaders is wrong. The land is to be divided among God's people and never ever to be sold.

VIGILANTES IN ENGLAND: "Dear Richard: Just finished reading your excellent book Vigilantes of Christendom[7]. I must say you gave me a history lesson that I never learned in school. I'm beginning to see things as they are. Every once in a while a book makes you tingle and Vigilantes is such a book, even though it says nothing the Bible doesn't say. The foreigners pouring into Britain are making things difficult. I see incidences of people beginning to defend themselves against outrages protected by the government." M. J. - London, England.

CAIN: "Dear Mr. Hoskins: Are you aware of the 'Cain-satanic seed line?' I have a booklet which states that Eve was seduced by Satan and Adam did not begat Cain." F. Z. - Florida

ED. This theory is found 1st century Christian literature. Sometime I will write on the subject. (The story may be found in HR #286 & #287.)

HOSKINS BOOKS: "Dear Mr. Hoskins: It's perfectly clear! The media came down on your book Vigilantes Of Christendom because it exposed its complicity in starting wars and promoting genocide. None of the recent wars would have developed into bloody carnage without their fabricated stories about the other side's atrocities - almost all of which have later been proved to be lies." D.S. - New York.

U.S. ARMY IN GERMANY: "Dear Mr. Hoskins: The American army appears to be doing everything possible to make the Germans dislike them. The Soviet menace has disappeared, but the American army holds manoeuvres including tanks and heavy weapons which go crashing through fields and forests, up village streets, and they do it without informing the Germans or asking their permission. Jet planes fly low at high speed over villages, stampeding livestock and smashing windows and dishes. The Americans are acting as if this were 1945 and they were the newly-arrived conquerors.

"Even the American-selected German politicians and judges have started being polite to the German people, something they have not done since 1945. They must wonder what will happen to them when the American army goes home and will no longer be there to protect them."
A. M. - Germany.

LA. RIOTS: "Dear Mr. Hoskins: You haven't given an explanation for the LA riots." R. M. - California

ED: "There's profit in dissension." Guaranteed loans are being made to rebuild a billion dollars worth of property that the bank-controlled media[8] incited the Blacks to bum down the city. While Blacks and Whites hassle each other they don't have time to sympathize with the thousands being daily foreclosed and evicted by usury contracts. Then too, in times of chaos - the organized few can control an un-organized many. Witness the wolf packs' takeover of Russia.

WHITE HORSE: "Dear Mr. Hoskins: The scriptures say: "And I saw heaven opened, and beheld a white horse; and he that sat upon him was called Faithful and True, and in righteousness he doth judge and make war." Rev 19; 11. The symbol of the Saxon is the white horse. It this the meaning?" R. K. - Virginia.

ED: That is my belief. The traditional symbol of the Saxon has always been the white horse. Pennsylvania and German barns, sails on Dutch boats, and Danish t-shirts, bear the white horse. The scriptures continue:

"And the armies which were in heaven followed him upon white horses, clothed in fine linen, white and clean, And out of his mouth goeth a sharp sword, and with it he should smite the nations." Rev 19:14-15.

LA LAW: "Dear Mr. Hoskins: Here in LA the Black mayor ordered the non-Black storekeepers who defended themselves arrested for discharging firearms within city limits. He s also fired the White police chief and is hiring a Black one. Your December 'Black Republics' was prophetic." O. L. - California.

"MAN": "Dear Mr. Hoskins: In Genesis 1:27 'God created man in his own image ... male and female created he them. In Chapter 2: 7 "God formed man of the dust of the ground ... and he took one of his ribs ... and made he a woman." Are these two separate distinct creations of 'man'?" G. M. - Illinois.

ED: The book of Jasher is quoted in Samuel. The rest of the book was left out because of space. I believe the 1st and 2nd chapters of Genesis are different books, now treated as chapters of one book. Both tell the same story, but from different sources. The reader is supposed to go to originals for details - if he can find them. Whether Eve was made at the same time as Adam or from his rib is unimportant when compared to the fact that God (The Word) created man (Adam- he who blushes red) in his (the Word's - the laws, statutes, & judgments) image. Now, THAT's important!"Ribs", "Adam", and dust are just detail when compared with the message - which is always and forever - the "Word!"

UNFILTERED NEWS

SCRIP: As predicted in WC/PC - scrip is back. It has been issued by the hundreds of millions by the state of California.

MEDIA BIAS: Grand Wizard Thom Robb of the KKK led 50 of his supporters to Washington Park, Iowa to again furnish copy to the media and humiliation, abuse and another defeat to Whites. Five hundred counter-demonstrators made the Robb effort look puny. A large picture in the News & Daily Advance, Lynchburg, May 31, 1992 shows a heavily outnumbered young White boy being held down while a Black jumps on his head. The News, a typical media organ, found no comparison in this with the LA King affair.

This is about the umpteenth time a Tom Robb debacle has helped the opposition and the trillionth time the media has used such antics to justify and incite increased wolf attacks on the sheep. The 1868 KKK knew better and would have had something to say to the likes of Robb.

KISSINGER'S PLANS FOR GERMANY: Henry Kissinger recently stated: "One of the greatest challenges could result from the 'new definition of Germany's role'. The US could be forced, with devastating consequences, to step in and re-establish equilibrium. Germany has become so strong that the existing European institutions cannot manage by themselves to guarantee a balance between Germany and her partners. It would be in no one's interest if Germany and Russia should see each other as the main allies. If both powers should draw too close to each other the danger of hegemony, or supremacy, arises."

Kissinger continued: "Without US involvement, Great Britain and France would not be in a position to guarantee the political equilibrium in Europe. Without U.S. influence in Europe, Germany would have 'no anchor to counteract nationalistic temptations". When faced with a choice of a Western partner, Russia would probably opt for Germany than for France. Therefore, it would be vital that France, via the EC, retain her veto power over German politics and that NATO with the US as the chief power, remain strong."

AFRICAN PROTESTANT CHURCH of S. Africa has declared itself to be fully in agreement with the stand of the leader of the Conservative Party, Dr. Andries Treumicht. Treumicht maintains that separate development is a biblically-based and divinely-instituted order. The director of the APK said, "separation is the only way in which different peoples can live together peacefully."

KISSING: "Kissing now must be considered a form of oral sex - scoff at this at your peril. Every body fluid tested has been found to be capable of carrying the AIDS virus." AIDS, Dr. William Cambell Douglas.
